Tells How the Rubber Industry Is Carried On.

villages. The inhabitants are composed mostly of native Peruvians, the better class being a mixture of the old Inca and Spanish blood. They are a very hospitable people, cultured and nice to get along with. The city of Paris is their mecca. They go there as often as they can and copy the French in nearly everything. They ship most of their rubber to Hamburg and Liverpool. There are probably 15 Englishmen in Iquitos, 30 Germans and a good many Chinamen and Portuguese. The Spanish language is spoken universally. The native Peruvians remind me a great deal of the Mexicans in their person, customs and habits. Yes, they drink intoxicants down there. They are what you would call hard drinkers and nearly everybody drinks. Their native drink is called 'cachassa,' and it is almost as strong as alcohol. Then they import wines from France and beer from the states. A great lot of beer is shipped to this place annually. Fevers are the curse of the country, and they are generally fatal to the foreigner. After the heavy rains the sun comes out bright and one can see the steam rise from the ground in a cloud. Still the rain is always wel-equator. Mr. Eberhardt was assigned | business, but he runs a risk, for he to the place of consul at Iquitos when must be there himself to look after the post was first established two his business and the fever is always He was assistant consul gave up his post there to go to the city in the midst of the South Ameri-can tropics. He is stationed there to promote American trade and protect American interests. The latter task is an easy one, as there is only one American in the place besides the consul. Mr Eberhardt appointed this man, who is a dentist, by the way, and making lots of money, to be vice consul. Lima, the capital of Peru, is across the mountains from Iquitos. between the two cities is practically impassable, and the traveler must go up the coast to the letheus of wood that smokes rather than burns. He pours the contents of the vessel on up the coast to the Isthmus of Panama, across the isthmus and ascend the Amazon to Iquitos, a four months' journey. Yet the cities are only about three hundred miles apart. Eberhardt has the distinction of having lived for three years in about as unhealthy a country as could be found in the world and coming home in fairly good health, al-though he said he had gained twenty pounds since he has been in Kansas He talks interestingly of his life in the heart of the tropics, of the rubber industry and the wonders of the Amazon river. His skin has been burned brown by the tropic sun. The Land of Rubber.

Mr. Eberhardt sailed from New York for his post in the tropics. It took him a month to reach the mouth of the Amazon and another on a mud bank and had to stay there month was spent on this river before 26 days. Mr. Eberhardt suffered from he reached Iquitos. "The Amazon is a wonderful river," he said, "but after steaming along through that coffee colored water in the midst of the jungle for a month, it becomes very tiresome. Iquitos is located on the banks of the river. They have a very good wharf there and long sheds along the river in which to store the rubber. The Amazon is three miles wide at Iquitos and about forty feet deep. Ocean going ships come up there the year around. Rubber is the sole product of the country, but this alone is a great source of revenue and sufficient to support many times the present population if modern methods were applied in gathering it and caring for the trees. The ship that I came home in carried a cargo of 400 tons of rubber, and this sells ing now over his terrible experience.

"We live on canned goods there," where live on canned goods there, "be said. "The only fresh meat obtainable is from poor cattle driven a month's journey from the mountains. It is impossible to raise fresh vegetables on account of the bugs and insects. A few of the Chinamen succeed in realising small gardens by sitting on guard all the time and fighting off the insects. The poisonous reptiles that the carried a cargo of 400 tons of rubber, and this sells

Ex-Kansas Tennis Champion. that I came home in carried a cargo of 400 tons of rubber, and this sells of 400 tons of rubber, and this sells for a dollar a pound. It is hot in Iquitos the year 'round. Awful hot. The place is only 350 feet above the sea level and is four degrees south of the equator, so one can imagine just a little about the heat. The city is surrounded by the jungle on three sides and the Amazon offers three miles of water filled with alligators on the remaining side, so we are what you would call isolated. Four little paths lead out of the city to near by waiting for him."

How Rubber Is Gathered. Mr. Eberhardt told of how rubber is gathered. A native starts out on his round of trees carrying a machete and a number of little tin cups. He goes up to a rubber tree and slashes it with his machete clear through the bark. Then he placed his cup below the wound and goes on to other trees and repeats the performance. A milky substance flows from the wound in the tree into the cup. Later he gathers up his cups and pours their contents into a large vessel which he carries to a fire made sticks and smokes it over this fire. The "milk" congeals into rubber as soon as it comes in contact with the smoke and heat. This is rubber, and all there is to the performance. It sells for a dollar a pound and is used here in Topeka largely for automobile tires.

Mr. Eberhardt said that just before Mr. Eberhardt said that just before he left Iquitos the rubber market had been shot all to pieces. The price had fallen off 50 per cent. They could not account for it down there, as the de-mand was as great as ever. They were finally forced to the conclusion that the big dealers were manipulating the prices. If they lived in the United States they would know they were about to be gripped by a trust.

The young consul told an interesting story of how he went up the Amazon with a party in a launch and got stuck two attacks of fever, the last time nearly giving up the ghost. Indeed, they had reported him dead. "But I was too tough a Kansan to be squeich ed by a tropic fever," he said, laugh-ing now over his terrible experience.

Ex-Kansas Tennis Champion.

this young man talks quietly and pleas-antly of his life in Iquitos and has antly of his life in Iquitos and has many nice things to say about the country and its people. This young man who has braved the cangers and withstood the ennul of a little station in the tropics and still remains full of cheerful enthusiasm, should and will rise to the top in his chosen profession of diplomacy.

General Manager J. E. Hurley has returned to Topeka after having been returned to Topeka after having been for the past ten days.

W. B. Hoeck, roundhouse foreman of the Missouri Pacific at Greenwick, fam., is visiting in Topeka. He was formerly employed in the local machine fession of diplomacy. fession of diplomacy.

He exploded one old time theory in his conversation Tuesday when he spoke of the danger of going swimming in the Amazon. Not even the natives will enter the water except on extraordinary occasions. But it is the electric fish they fear and not the alligators as popularly supposed. There is danger from the 'gators but nothing compared to that from the electric fish. They are to be found in the river in shoals and if they come in contact with a man the shock will render him insensible at once and he will drown unless rescued. "These fish are as bad as a live cable wire," said Mr. Eberhardt. He exploded one old time theory
